Comment: As the sun dipped below the skyline, casting golden light through the tall windows, Clara realized she'd spent the entire day absorbed in someone else's life—and in doing so, had found new clarity about her own. She packed her bag slowly, turned off the lights, and stepped back into the evening. The city buzzed with returning energy, but Clara walked with the same unhurried pace, carrying with her not just documents, but dignity, memory, and the quiet joy of meaningful work. Somewhere, she knew, Eleanor Whitmore would understand.
